(Photo by Drew Angerer/Getty Images) BIRMINGHAM, Ala. -- Judge Roy Moore's campaign for Senate is trying to bring in $1.4 million to the state this month, a fundraising push that's typical in a closely watched election but slightly behind its pace in 2012, when Republicans Roy Moore and Luther Strange faced off in the primary. The Moore campaign has raised nearly $1.3 million since Aug. 17 and has about $520,000 cash on hand. All told, Moore has $3.9 million cash on hand going into Tuesday's special election for the Senate seat vacated by Jeff Sessions when he became U.S. attorney general. In contrast, when Strange challenged Moore in the GOP primary, Moore had $2.2 million cash on hand going into the Aug. 15 primary and Strange had $2.3 million. In the final stretch of the 2012 GOP Senate primary, candidates spent big money. Moore and Strange each spent $10 million. The Moore campaign received a boost in donations from major Republican donors. The Moore campaign received $1.2 million from Alabama-based American Fuel & Petrochemical, a part of the company that makes Lubrizol, a manufacturer of solvents and lubricants. Moore has been a featured speaker at an American Fuel event in Alabama. Moore is scheduled to speak to employees of American Fuel and Petrochemical at an event scheduled for Thursday. When Strange was in the Republican primary, he received $1.1 million in donations from American Fuel. Former Alabama Chief Justice and U. 1678ea9f9e
